In times gone by, the national government had no role in supporting individuals who could not find employment to provide income to sustain them. The only support that was available for people who were sick, disabled or otherwise unable to find work or other legitimate sources of income was the Parish organisation based on the Churches.

Sue Doig will describe the extent of support system and how it worked for the support of the local community during the 18th century

New speakers are very welcome. If you think you could keep us entertained for an hour or so on family, social or local history please contact us.
